
"But I only eat meat two times a week. I only take the car when it's rainy. The big factories pollute anyway. I always Co2-compensate when I fly. I need the AC on, otherwise I can't think clearly. I only buy fast fashion brands at the thrift store. Everyone else do it too. My individual actions doesn't matter that much anyway. I'll start taking action next month. It's too complicated to figure out what's sustainable. At least i'm aware of the climate crisis – that's something, right? It's not like i'm the worst offender. I'm making a campaign about climate change. I only take long showers when I need to think. I can't bike because my outfit isn't bike-friendly. It's just one flight. I only use the dryer when I'm in a hurry. There's just not enough protein in vegan products. I'll start being sustainable when life gets less busy. I'd sort my trash if the bins weren't so far away. I don't believe in climate change. I didn't cause climate change – boomers did. Future-tech will safe us. I love the heat anyway."

Excuses won't fix the climate crisis
